

PANEL DISCUSSION AND CRITICAL DIALOGUE ABOUT CARE AND MENTAL HEALTH

with Alexia Arani and Ramsey Ismail

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8TH

11:30am-1pm

Biomedical and Research Facility II (BRF II) - Conference Room 2A03

~ Lunch Provided ~

Please RSVP here

~

All disciplines (including social science, medicine, arts, humanities, engineering, and more) welcome

Hosted by “Communicating Experiences: Design, Health, and Wellness” -- An interdisciplinary, student-led research group exploring questions related to healthcare, affective experiences of medicine and medical technologies, and how we communicate about health and medicine (especially across disciplinary lines or between patient/practitioner)

~

Alexia Arani is a PhD candidate in Anthropology with a specialization in Critical Gender Studies. Her doctoral research examines everyday practices of care among queer and trans people of color in Southern California.

Ramsey Ismail is a PhD student in Anthropology. His current work explores how the inexplicability of certain medical conditions accomplishes its own form of work, and how those diagnosed accept and refuse to identify with those diagnoses.

With thanks to the Institute for Arts and Humanities